FORTY YEARS OF FILM AT CLEVELAND MUSEUM

The Cleveland Museum of Art announces a new film program commencing Wednesday, September 5.

The film series spans the years between World War I and the period immediately following World War II. The disastrous events of the two wars, the great depression, and the "Cold War" are depicted from various points of view. Edward B. Henning, the Curator of Modern Art, who selected the films explains, "The film program this year is intended to demonstrate that the documentary can record, can be propaganda, can be a work of art in its own right, and can inspire fictional film." Documented chronicles of events are contrasted with fictional films that elaborate upon historical incidents; propaganda films churned out prolifically by the British, Americans, Russians, and Germans (and not available to the public until recently) are presented in startling juxtaposition.

All films will be shown in Gartner Auditorium on Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m. and Sundays at 3:30 p.m. Admission is free to the public; however, seats are reserved for members, upon presentation of membership cards, until ten minutes before the programs begin.
